

Turkey Macro Flash

December C/A: Strong Finish To 2012 But Is The Best Behind Us?

- At US$4.7 billion, the current account deficit in December came in considerably narrower than the consensus and our forecast (both US$5.4bn). Our forecast error stems largely from stronger-than expected shuttle trade. With this outcome, the current account gap in 2012 narrows to US$48.9bn from US$77bn in 2011. Standing at a surplus of US$3.5bn in 2012, the improvement in the non-energy current account balance is even more pronounced (vs. a deficit of about US$29.5bn in 2011). We underline that the turnaround in net gold exports (US$10.5bn) accounts for 32% of the total adjustment in the non-energy current account deficit (about US$33bn) in 2012.
- A quick glance at the seasonally adjusted current account balance figures documents the importance of net gold exports in the adjustment process (Figure 2). It is also interesting to note that the recent levels of the non-energy and non-gold current account balances (in seasonally adjusted terms) are comparable to those seen in 2009 when GDP contracted by almost 5%.
- On the capital account front, the following developments in 2012 are worth noting: (i) At US$8.3bn, FDI inflows are weaker than in 2011 (US$13.7bn), as the quality of inflows is yet to improve (Figure 3); (ii) At about US$11.1bn, currency and deposits represent a comparable asset drawdown with 2011 (around US$10.9bn); and (iii) At US$8.9bn, portfolio inflows (equity net) is much stronger than 2011 (US$1.7bn). Concerning errors and omissions, the figure, which stood at US$4.0bn in 2012, remains considerably smaller than in 2011 (US$11.6bn). Finally, the CBT's reserves are up by almost US$21bn in 2012 compared with a drop of US$1.8bn in 2011 – a development largely driven by the CBT's ROC policy.

Citi Research is a division of Citigroup Global Markets Inc. (the "Firm"), which does and seeks to do business with companies covered in its research reports. As a result, investors should be aware that the Firm may have a conflict of interest that could affect the objectivity of this report. Investors should consider this report as only a single factor in making their investment decision.

Forecast Implications

Notwithstanding the impressive external adjustment in 2012, we expect Turkey's current account deficit to widen from an estimated 6% of GDP in 2012 to about 7% this year, which remains too wide for comfort. In terms of the key risks, while the possibility of softer domestic demand may lead to a narrower deficit than we currently envision, substantial deviations from our oil price assumption (about US$100pb) may lead us to revise our projection. Moreover, sharp EURUSD moves, which tend to effect Turkey's terms of trade, may also have implications for the country's external performance

Policy Implications

Notwithstanding the improvement in Turkey's current account balance, which we expect to register a deficit of about 7% of GDP in 2013, the external imbalance looks set to remain too wide for comfort in the near term. Since estimates for the norm current account gap lie between 2.5%-5% of GDP, it appears that Turkey's growth performance in the near term will continue to be shaped by the vagaries of capital flows.

Against this backdrop, we argue that Turkey's key macro challenge of excessive reliance on foreign savings to finance its growth remains unattended. A cursory look at the data suggests that delivering a GDP growth of 4.5%-5.0% per year would require an investment to GDP ratio of about 28%. Consequently, growing 4.5%-5.0% per year and keeping the current account gap close to its norm (5% of GDP) would imply a domestic saving rate of 23%-25%, which is well above the 15% achieved by the Turkish economy in the years between 2000 and 2011. Evidence suggests that securing such a large increase in saving is possible through a rebalancing of public sector accounts and creating a supply response. In our view, however, policy actions to date fall short of attaining this goal.
