Housing and Mortgage Data

- There are several points of interest in today's CML data on mortgage lending and BoE data on mortgage rates. First, the number of mortgage loans to first-time buyers (FTBs) rose 19% YoY in June and was the highest for any month since late-2007. This supports others signs that the more detailed loan approval process following the late-April Mortgage Market Review has not significantly slowed housing momentum. Second, the median ratio of capital and interest payments to income among FTBs and home movers has been stable over the last year at 19.3%, with the rise in house prices offset by a 30bp drop in the average mortgage rate paid by FTBs. With such low mortgage rates, this affordability ratio remains below the average since 2005 (21.1%).
- Third, the share of new mortgages that are at fixed rates rose to 90% in Q2, up from 89% in Q1 and 85% a year ago, and this measure is now the highest since data began 20 years ago. As the possibility of MPC tightening comes into focus, home buyers seem to be increasingly seeking the relative protection of fixed rather than variable mortgage rates. Fourth, the share of new mortgages that are capital repayment mortgages (as opposed to interest only) was stable at 99% in Q2 among FTBs and rose from 92% in Q1 to 93% (record high) in Q2 among existing home owners. By contrast, 20 years ago, only 25% of new mortgage loans among FTBs and existing home owners were capital repayment loans. The almost-complete shift to capital repayment loans is helping to put a brake on aggregate household debt accumulation, and the household debt/income ratio probably is still falling.
- Fifth, the BoE report that some key mortgage rates edged down in July, with the average rate on a 2-year fixed mortgage (75% LTV) down by 7bp MoM and the average rate on a 90% LTV 2-year fixed loan down by 4bp. These rates have not trended up or down over recent months, but both remain more than 100bp down from two years ago – meaning that people who took out a 2-year fixed loan two years ago in general can re-finance at better terms now. And sixth, the BoE report that key rates on unsecured personal loans are also still trending down. The average interest rate on a 10K personal loan fell to 5.12% in July from 5.23% in June and 6.10% a year ago and now is the lowest since data began in 1995. This rate is down by fully 570bp since late-2009, and the availability of cheaper unsecured credit probably is a contributor to the marked recovery in car sales.
- In our view, these trends suggest that the economy is likely to continue to grow strongly, fuelled by cheap money. Moreover, with the high use of fixed rate loans and capital repayment loans among recent mortgages, plus the relatively low number of FTBs over recent years, the economy's near-term sensitivity to hikes in Bank Rate probably is less than it was in the pre-crisis period.
