Lebanon Macro View

Markets get the jitters, but fundamentals unchanged

- It's been a rough month in Lebanon, with sectarian fighting raising fears of spillover from Syria. Lebanese sovereign assets have sold off significantly, but we are not convinced that the sell-off reflects any shift in underlying fundamentals
- We believe that the poor performance of Lebanese sovereign assets reflects an exaggerated fear of spill-over from Syria. While we do believe further small-scale sectarian violence is likely, we do not believe that a descent into nation-wide civil conflict is likely at this stage. The main reason for this is that we believe the internal military balance in Lebanon remains heavily skewed towards Hizbollah, with little likelihood of a challenge in the near term.
- Second, we believe the markets may be reflecting plans by the Banque du Liban to increase net issuance of government debt by $2 billion in 2012, announced in mid-May. We do not think this is the beginning of a borrowing spree by government and expect scarcity to reappear in the market once the new issuance is absorbed.
- Overall, we would argue that sovereign risk in Lebanon remains as elevated as ever, and that the risks are not fully evident in the spreads on Lebanese sovereign bonds relative to other emerging markets of a similar credit risk profile. However, we believe that this reflects the strong liquidity in the domestic banking sector, which acts as the primary sponsor of Lebanon's Eurobonds. We do not believe this dynamic has changed, and would thus expect the recent poor performance of the bonds to reverse once the above factors driving this performance are resolved.

Citi Investment Research & Analysis is a division of Citigroup Global Markets Inc. (the "Firm"), which does and seeks to do business with companies covered in its research reports. As a result, investors should be aware that the Firm may have a conflict of interest that could affect the objectivity of this report. Investors should consider this report as only a single factor in making their investment decision.

Markets get the jitters, but fundamentals unchanged

It's been a rough month in Lebanese politics, even by its own standards. Twice this month, fighting has broken out between pro- and anti-Assad militias (Alawites and Sunnis) in the northern city of Tripoli, requiring the Lebanese Army to intervene to keep the peace. Fighting has also worryingly erupted on the streets of the capital, Beirut, following the kidnapping of a number of Shia pilgrims in Lebanon. The death toll from the sectarian violence is approaching two dozen, and tensions within the government and on the street are high.

Against this backdrop, Lebanese sovereign assets have sold off significantly in the past couple of weeks. The spread on short-dated Lebanese Eurobonds, in particular, has risen sharply, by almost 200 basis points at their widest. Markets appear to be nervous, but are the nerves justified by underlying fundamentals?

Source: Bloomberg, Citi Investment Research and Analysis

We believe the recent market jitters are related to two factors which are likely to subside in the coming weeks. First, the recent rise in sectarian violence is raising fears that the violence in Syria is spilling over into Lebanon, and that the prospect of civil strife is rising. This has dampened demand from both international and local sponsors, driving yields up. While we do believe further small-scale sectarian violence is likely, particularly between rival militias such as in the northern city of Tripoli, and that this reflects some spillover from the fighting in Syria, we do not believe that a descent into nation-wide civil conflict is likely at this stage. The main reason for this is that we believe the internal military balance in Lebanon remains heavily skewed towards Hizbollah, with little likelihood of a challenge in the near term.

Second, we believe the markets may be reflecting plans by the Banque du Liban to increase net issuance of government debt by $2 billion in 2012, announced in mid-May. We think one of the explanatory factors behind the consistent tightening in yields in recent years has been the fact that there has been no net issuance by the government, with the stock of outstanding Eurobonds pretty static over the past five years at around US$20bn. Meanwhile, dollar deposits in domestic banks, the main sponsor of Lebanon's Eurobonds, have grown at an average rate of 10% annually. This means there has been increasing demand for a finite set of outstanding paper, with the net result being a consistent downward pressure on yields. The announced issuance plans should relieve some of this pressure in the near term, but we do not think this is the beginning of a borrowing spree by government and expect scarcity to reappear in the market once the new issuance is absorbed.

Overall, we would argue that sovereign risk in Lebanon remains as elevated as ever, and that the risks are not fully evident in the spreads on Lebanese sovereign bonds relative to other emerging markets of a similar credit risk profile. However, we believe that this reflects the strong liquidity in the domestic banking sector, which acts as the primary sponsor of Lebanon's Eurobonds. We do not believe this dynamic has changed, and would thus expect the recent poor performance of the bonds to reverse once the above factors driving this performance are resolved.

OTHER DISCLOSURES

For securities recommended in the Product in which the Firm is not a market maker, the Firm is a liquidity provider in the issuers' financial instruments and may act as principal in connection with such transactions. The Firm is a regular issuer of traded financial instruments linked to securities that may have been recommended in the Product. The Firm regularly trades in the securities of the issuer(s) discussed in the Product. The Firm may engage in securities transactions in a manner inconsistent with the Product and, with respect to securities covered by the Product, will buy or sell from customers on a principal basis.

Securities recommended, offered, or sold by the Firm: (i) are not insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; (ii) are not deposits or other obligations of any insured depository institution (including Citibank); and (iii) are subject to investment risks, including the possible loss of the principal amount invested. Although information has been obtained from and is based upon sources that the Firm believes to be reliable, we do not guarantee its accuracy and it may be incomplete and condensed. Note, however, that the Firm has taken all reasonable steps to determine the accuracy and completeness of the disclosures made in the Important Disclosures section of the Product. The Firm's research department has received assistance from the subject company(ies) referred to in this Product including, but not limited to, discussions with management of the subject company(ies). Firm policy prohibits research analysts from sending draft research to subject companies. However, it should be presumed that the author of the Product has had discussions with the subject company to ensure factual accuracy prior to publication. All opinions, projections and estimates constitute the judgment of the author as of the date of the Product and these, plus any other information contained in the Product, are subject to change without notice. Prices and availability of financial instruments also are subject to change without notice. Notwithstanding other departments within the Firm advising the companies discussed in this Product, information obtained in such role is not used in the preparation of the Product. Although Citi Investment Research & Analysis (CIRA) does not set a predetermined frequency for publication, if the Product is a fundamental research report, it is the intention of CIRA to provide research coverage of the/those issuer(s) mentioned therein, including in response to news affecting this issuer, subject to applicable quiet periods and capacity constraints. The Product is for informational purposes only and is not intended as an offer or solicitation for the purchase or sale of a security. Any decision to purchase securities mentioned in the Product must take into account existing public information on such security or any registered prospectus.

Investing in non-U.S. securities, including ADRs, may entail certain risks. The securities of non-U.S. issuers may not be registered with, nor be subject to the reporting requirements of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. There may be limited information available on foreign securities. Foreign companies are generally not subject to uniform audit and reporting standards, practices and requirements comparable to those in the U.S. Securities of some foreign companies may be less liquid and their prices more volatile than securities of comparable U.S. companies. In addition, exchange rate movements may have an adverse effect on the value of an investment in a foreign stock and its corresponding dividend payment for U.S. investors. Net dividends to ADR investors are estimated, using withholding tax rates conventions, deemed accurate, but investors are urged to consult their tax advisor for exact dividend computations. Investors who have received the Product from the Firm may be prohibited in certain states or other jurisdictions from purchasing securities mentioned in the Product from the Firm. Please ask your Financial Consultant for additional details. Citigroup Global Markets Inc. takes responsibility for the Product in the United States. Any orders by US investors resulting from the information contained in the Product may be placed only through Citigroup Global Markets Inc.
